

What happened at the Expert Group?

Wednesday 1st August 2018

The meeting was in The Clydesdale Bank in Glasgow

Some researchers from Glasgow Caledonian University came to the meeting. The researchers wanted to ask what the group think about a new pack that is being developed to help people to test if they have a sexually transmitted infection. This pack would be posted to people with learning disabilities who have had sex with someone that has found out that they have a sexually transmitted infection and might have passed it on.

The group also had a visit from someone from the Scottish Government to talk about a review the Scottish Government is doing. The review is about how decision making in Scotland is made. The Scottish Government want people to have their say on how they would like to be involved.